Two teenage boys were recently imprisoned for life for murdering a woman because she was dressed as a goth. The woman, twenty, and her twenty-one-year-old boyfriend (both of whom were wearing black clothes and had piercings) were walking home through a park when they met a group of teenagers.

At first, there was a good-natured and friendly atmosphere between the young people, but this conversation quickly became cruel as a group of five youths attacked the twenty-one-year-old man. He was suddenly knocked to the ground and kicked about until he was unconscious.

As the girlfriend tried to stop the attack, holding his head on her lap and calling for help, some of the gang began kicking her. She was left lying by her boyfriend's side, unconscious. Police took them to the nearest hospital and the woman was in a comma for two weeks before she died. The boyfriend has been out of his comma for a while now and claims he finds the world a 'terrifying place' to live in.

The judge, who sentenced the attackers, said that their behaviour seemed to be based solely on the way the pair were dressed.
